I'm trying to figure out if it's possible to access an array that was created in a function on another function. For example: function someFunction(){ var numbers = [1,2,3,4,5]; }; function someOtherFunction(){ var numbers = someFunction(); }; someOtherFunction(); How can I access the array created in the function someFunction? A: The variable numbers is only defined inside function someFunction To pass this function as argument, you have to define it with function name as a parameter: function someFunction(foo){ var numbers = [1,2,3,4,5]; return foo; }; function someOtherFunction(f){ var numbers = f(); } someOtherFunction(someFunction); var a = someOtherFunction(someFunction); // access numbers array Please read this answer for more information: How do I pass in a function as an argument? Q: A regex that accepts only "0" or "1" or "2" or "3" I'm trying to make a regex that accepts 0 or 1 or 2 or 3. The problem is I have no idea how to make the regex to accept only "0", "1", "2", "3". I'm trying to make a regex that accepts only numbers from 00 to 99. i.e. A number like "01234" is accepted, but not "1asdad" for example. A: You can't use regular expressions to match numbers -- the grammar of numbers is not regular. However, you can still use a regular expression to match numbers, and you can restrict the set of valid digits by use of a character class like \d. You can match numbers with a single regular expression: d41b202975

New levels: Turret War Turret War is one of the many different game modes in the entire Charlie series. For this mode, you must lead your Charlie through numerous levels in an attempt to destroy the enemy base. But be careful: You only have a limited amount of Charlie's power and you must use it very carefully. When you spawn, you have 30 seconds to find the nearest control room and unlock it. Each time you unlock a control room, you'll have 5 seconds to rush to it. When you've reached the control room, you must defend it against an endless amount of enemies. Your enemies will use a variety of turrets to attack you, but you can protect yourself using the nearby special powerups. Powerups are not distributed the same way as the original Charlie, but all you need to know about them is that they're blue and, when you're on the screen, you're invincible and you are given a whole range of attack options. You can use your double, triple, or quadruple attack by tapping the screen. And you can use your special attack by tapping in the very centre of the screen. You can also tap to jump, which is useful for getting away from enemies who are pursuing you. However, you must be careful not to use up all your powerups too early. You can't carry more than 3 powerups at any one time, and if you run out, you lose. So, what's this got to do with Charlie II? Quite a lot. There are a number of control rooms in the game, and it's quite easy to get stuck between control rooms. So, when you run out of powerups, you are forced to tap around in order to find more. And if you're playing on the Super-Wide screen, it's quite hard to get to the control rooms! So, this means you have to play the game a lot differently than you would in the original game. Instead of taking time to unlock control rooms, you must find them as quickly as possible. And instead of running around trying to find more powerups, you must stay close to the control rooms and protect them as best you can. The main idea behind this mode is that you must learn to use your Charlie's power in the most efficient manner possible. By doing this, you can destroy the enemy base while also causing the most damage to your own forces! You
